THE PRESENT DAY.

How Much Better Things Are Than They Used to Be.

Her eyes were open, but her cheeks yet glowed with the warm flush of sleep. Lan-guidly she gazed at the sunlight playing upon the tinted wall. "Jane, Jane!"

The sound of a voice was wafted to her ears and her delicate lip ourled scornfully as she recognized the accents of her mis-"Jane, are you going to get up?"

She raised herself upon her elbow and brushed aside the lace curtains of her couch, suffering the light of day to stream over the sumptuous covers and rich hangings.

She spoke sternly, not to say resentfully. The voice grew suddenly softer. "Won't you please get up?" it pleaded. She ruminated.

"Is the fire started?" she presently inquired. 'Yee, Jane."

"And the steak pounded?" "Yes."

"And the coffee ground?" "It's all done, Jane." "And the biscuits mixed?" "Yes."

With a smile at herself in the mirror op-"All right," she cried; "go right ahead and if I ain't there by the time"-She released the wealth of brown tresses and let them fall in billows about her

"Breakfast is ready. Don't"-She proceeded leisurely with her toilet.

"Wait for me. I'd"-She was braiding her hair with deft fin-sleep."

"Thank you, Jane."

As she slowly dressed she reflected how vastly the condition of the hired girl had been ameliorated within a comparatively few years,-Detroit Free Press.

Green Grape Jelly.

Jelly made from unripe grapes, just before they change from green to purple, is very delicate. A correspondent of The Housekeepers' Weekly gives the following recipe for it: Wash the grapes, after pick ing them from the stems, in several waters, then put them in a porcelain kettle. Wash them before putting them on the stove, as then you will not need to put any water with them, and of course the less water the less time it will take to boil the juice. Put the grapes, when sufficiently cooked, into a bag made of firm flannel and let the juice drain out without squeezing, if possible. To a pint of the juice add a pint of sugar, as for other jel-

A Quaint Bracket.

Odd but attractive in way of a bracket is one recently seen and here illustrated. It is composed of white enameled wood with fretwork gilded.

DRAPED BRACKET. The drapery is in soft silk. The amateur carpenter and decorator would not find it difficult to carry out a somewhat similar arrangement. Such a bracket in dark stained wood with drapery of velvet in any deep rich color would be very effective for the display of old china and curios.

Not Very Lasting.

The friendship that exists between the different European countries is not very lasting. England and Turkey are friendly at present, but either or both of them may be seeking other allies before a week

These diplomatic notes remind one very much of the note a bachelor who, wanting a wife, wrote to a young lady. He applied for her heart and hand, and wound up as follows

"Have the goodness to send me a reply as soon as possible, as I have another young person in my eye."-Texas Siftings.

The Brook.

I slip, I slide, I gloom, I glance Among my skimming swallows; I make the netted sunbeam dance Against my sandy shallows.

I murmur under moon and stars In brambly wildernesses; I linger by my shingly bars; I loiter 'round my cresses.

And out again I curve and flow
To join the brimming river;
For men may come and men may go.
But I go on forever. -Tennyson BIRDS WITH WARLIKE NATURES.

Vindictive Robins That Attack Even Men and Women.

The conduct of birds is sometimes peculiar and very queer. At the North End and on the Hill are two peculiar cases of eccentricity in robins, whose conduct is not less notable and perhaps less readily understood than that of a kingbird who some years ago made her nest on the lower branch of a pear tree near a North End residence. That bird so annoyed a little party of young croquet players on the lawn near the tree by flying down at them and snapping her bill in their eyes almost. as to break up their games. To punish her for her impudence a pole was thrust up repeatedly by the side of the nest

This so angered the mother bird that whenever that person appeared, coming down the step on the lawn, she would fly at him and seem determined to peck his eyes out. Soon she learned to fly at him as soon as he appeared on the steps, before he got down to the lawn-and also to punish him in an unlooked for way; a kind of artillery practice in which the aim was generally at the victim's head—and it rarely missed. The robin is no such bird. But the one at the North End, evidently the proprietor of a nest of young birds near by, is the implacable foe of a particular cat. This feline is a pet black cat, whose mistress keeps him as much as possible in the upper tenement where she lives, letting him take sun and air up there in the open

There, as soon as the robin sees him, she flies right at him-not waiting for the cat to attack her or her young, but bouncing right into his face, till she fairly forces him to beat a retreat. Sometimes she finds him on the lawn. Then there is a set combat. The bird files right at the "Rather eat alone than miss my beauty cat's eyes. The cat, snarling and snapping, jumps back and then jumps for the The bird nimbly retreats-executing a backward movement on the lawn, as swift and dexterous as only a bird can execute-and then flies at the cat, pecking at his eyes. The cat's mistress, fearing for her pet, one day interfered, and grabbing him in her arms was about to take him off the field, when to her astonishment the robin flew at the cat where she held it in her arms, and then flew in the woman's face, forcing her to drop the cat and run to save her own eyes.

Next day the cat was seen to go to a low swung hammock under some trees, and reaching up and getting hold of it he was enjoying a nice little swing all by himself, when his bird foe espled him and flew down at him, driving him ignomintously A day later be was seen on the fence, "There's no occasion for alarming the neighbors, anyhow. If you must have such t thing as this in the house why that time, and the robin stood in front of him. "If ever a bird uttered profane abuse," said a spectator, "that robin was the bird. Such another abusive scolding no cat surely ever had." But the cat could stand that better than the bird's beak aimed at his eyes. This scene occurred on "Sir!"
